DWeb Principles

These define the values of a decentralized web based on enabling agency of all peoples – the basis for behavioral norms and mutual accountability to bring about a more just and equitable world.

These stand alongside other sets of principles that share or expand upon these values, and originate from those involved with and convened by the Internet Archive's work on the decentralized web. This is a summarized version of the principles.

including the complete text of the principles summarized here.

01. Technology for human agency

We stand for technology that enables people to be the primary beneficiaries of the web, upholding their privacy, security and self-determination.

We urge coexistence and interoperability of multiple technologies, when open source code is a fundamental building block, and aim for peer-to-peer relationships.

We minimize surveillance and manipulation of people's behaviors while optimizing for social benefits and empowerment.

02. Distributed benefits

THE OIL RUSH

Over the last half-century the oil industry (multinationals and the Ecuadorian state oil company) have opened roads for oil platforms and pipelines into the heart of the Waorani people's ancestral lands. Now, the government wants to sell rights to exploit oil in the headwaters of the Curaray River, one of the last remaining oil-free, roadless areas in
